Allowable Subject Matter

2. Claims 1,3, 5, 8-9 are allowed.
3. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance

Claims 1 and 5

The closest prior art of Kodimer et al. and Goldstein et al. teach cut and copy paste operations from one application to another. In conjunction, the most common copy/paste application is the known clipboards associated with word processing applications such as Microsoft Word. These applications provide solutions for pasting data to applications that are located locally or in a distributed configuration. The teachings of Goldstein in combination with Kodimer allow for the user to copy and paste text or data to other applications. Both applications along with Microsoft Word teach using a clipboard to store previously clipped data. However, the amended claims now clearly contrast the prior art for the features of distinguishing the prior art clipboards by having a clipboard with two parts: basic and multi. The basis clipboard is used to copy and paste single items if the paste operation occurs before a time expires. If time expires then the data is automatically copied to the multi-clipboard. If multiple items are copied to the basic then the prior stored data is moved to the multi-clipboard. The difference in the claims is that if the user does not paste within a period of time the data is moved to the multi-clipboard and then only after the timer counts to a pre-determined period is the multi-clipboard displayed to allow the user to select and paste from the multi-clipboard to the new location. The prior art does not appear to distinguish separate clipboards based on the timed operations of the user.

Therefore, the prior art does not suggest or disclose the claims as a whole and are allowed over the prior art because the prior art

These claims are dependent upon Claims 1 and 5 and are thus allowable.

The accompanied examiners amendment includes amendments to claim 5 to incorporate or tie another statutory class of invention to the method and is now interpreted as complying with the interim guidelines and In re Bilski.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
